GIRL'S GRAPHIC STORY OF CHUM'S DEATH AT LOCKED TRIANGLE DOOR

Katie Alterman Describes to Jury the Struggle of Margaret Schwartz to Pass Barrier While Clothes and Hair Were Blazing.

STATE CLOSES ITS CASE WITH STORY STILL FRESH.

Little Shirt Waist Maker Dramatically Tells How She Had to Fight Her Own Way to Safety.

The death of Margaret Schwartz in the awful Asech Building fire was brought directly before the jury in dramatic fashion, this afternoon, during the trial of Isaac Harris and Max Blanck, proprietors of the Triangle Waist Company. Katie Alterman, one of the survivors, told how Margaret Schwartz died at the locked Washington place door of the factory, and it was the most important evidence taken thus far in the trial, as Harris and Blanck are specifically charged with responsibility for the death of the Schwartz girl in the fire that cost 147 lives.

The Christmas present plan was advanced by President Shonts at the regular weekly meeting of the directors last Wednesday and was unanimously adopted. In connection with the material appreciation of the services of the employees the company caused the following notice to be posted throughout the system today:

"The management desires to express its high appreciation of the efficient and faithful manner in which the employees of this company perform their work, individually and collectively. The most commendable accomplishment in the transportation of passengers on the subway and elevated divisions is due very largely to the untiring and earnest desire among all classes to improve the service and add to the comfort and convenience of passengers without other thought than to the efficient performance of their duties, and this under the most trying circumstances."
